

Dedication

I first would like to thank God for giving me the ability to do computer programming that I discovered by accident in 1992. I was studying law and quickly became more interested in how computers work than law.

My mother and father that taught me that honesty and hard work is the best policy. They not only taught me it they lived it in their every day life.

To my sister Nancy who has always been there for me. You wouldn't believe how much she has put up with all the dumb things I've done and always loved me.

A plug for Alcoholics Anonymous for saving me from myself. I was one of those people who could drink two fifths of bourbon on the weekend and go out Monday and jog five miles then bench press 308 lbs. So it was those other drunks that had a drinking problem not me. Yea, right.

Thanks go to James Van Praagh for getting me off religion and on spirituality. I learned the importance of writing this book to truly help people and not just make money.

To Al, who was always there to answer my programming questions. He would never have that disgusted tone in his voice no matter how stupid my question was.

And finally to all of you that have sent me email. You have truly shown me how to listen. I have to be careful so I don't think I know everything.
